Organising Roister: A Student's Perspective

The grind to make Roister 23 as exceptional as it turned out to be, began more than a month prior to the event. From showing up to early morning practice sessions to taking responsibility for all the back-end work, the entire Business Economics department of Aryabhata College showed unadulterated dedication to make the event possible. Despite challenges related to facility permissions, ground condition and partial availability of the first-year students to help with organising and participating in Roister 23 due to their first semester examinations, the department worked tirelessly to overcome them, making necessary adjustments, and ensuring that everything was in place for a successful event.

The decorations team created an exciting and vibrant atmosphere, while the event planning was meticulously executed with careful coordination between game officials, volunteers, and representatives of participating colleges. Effective marketing efforts were put in place to attract participants and spectators, with eye-catching banners and posters created by the design and technology team. It was the collective efforts of all the people for whom Roister means something more than just a college event that made this edition such a huge success.
